Bill Dempsey at Katukutu Aboriginal Young Men's Hostel

BA1203/1208

Born in the Northern Territory, Bill Dempsey was recruited to play for the West Perth football club in 1960. He became a regular in the West Perth side, winning the Breckler Medal as the club's best and fairest in 1966 and playing in premierships in 1969 and 1971. Dempsey was made a Member of the Order of the British Empire in June 1976, for "services to sport", and he was named in West Perth's Team of the Century in 2000 and in the AFL NT's Indigenous Team of the Century in 2005. Whilst in Perth Bill spent time at the Katakutu Aboriginal Young Men's Hostel. Katakutu was established in 1958, as an independently managed hostel in Mount Lawley to accommodate young Aboriginal men coming to Perth to work from rural Western Australia. Included in the Robert McKeich photographic collection are images of various young Aboriginal men who stayed at Katukutu Aboriginal Young Men's Hostel in the early 1960s including Bill and boxer Jeffrey Dynevor.

Mary Montgomerie Bennett and Ada Bromham collection of photographs relating to Aboriginal people's experience in fighting for citizenship and welfare rights.

BA2641

Human rights activists Mary Montgomerie Bennett and Ada Bromham lobbied on behalf of Aboriginal peoples in the Goldfields. Within this collection are a range of photographs that relate to several families and their personal experiences of attaining citizenship and welfare rights. An example are photographs of Bilson family members Alec (sometimes Alick) Bilson (Kulpuntja), Jacob Bilson (Tjinawiyatu), Norman Bilson (Walaru) and Lulu Bilson (Kowituku) who lobbied for pensions when they were no longer able to work. The Bilson family worked as trackers and pastoral workers in the Northern Goldfields region in the early to mid-20th century. Kulbundja had worked as an experienced dogger and expert tracker at Mount Margaret Mission in the early 1920s. He was married to Lulu, who had earlier worked on Whitecliffs Station, north of Kalgoorlie. Both Kulbundja and Lulu had worked on cattle stations until 1959 when they were told that they were too old. Walaru or Norman Bilson worked as a stockman since the end of the First World War. Much of Bennett and Bromham's correspondence relates to the Bilson family and their welfare.

D H Lawrence letters to Mollie Skinner

MN 186

Mollie (Mary Louisa) Skinner (1876-1955), nurse and writer, was born in Perth on 19 September 1876. She established hospitals in the bush at Wagin and Katanning. Her last nursing post was in World War II at the Moore River Aboriginal Settlement. In 1922 she met D. H. Lawrence at the boarding house she ran with a friend at Darlington. Lawrence encouraged her to write a novel based on her brother Jack's life, which was published as The Boy in the Bush in London in 1924. Correspondence in this collection (1908-1960) includes letters to various people including Mary Durack, and from D. H. Lawrence (1923-1928) mainly concerned with the novels on which they were collaborating. Only the letters from Lawrence have been digitised, but Skinner's private archives include a range of other material.

Dominion League & the Secession Movement

PR10563

The Dominion League was formed at a public meeting at His Majesty's Theatre on 30 July 1930. The League was established to agitate for the separation of Western Australia from the Commonwealth and the creation of Western Australia as a Dominion within the British Empire. The Dominion League rapidly became a dynamic and influential movement within Western Australian politics. Although proclaiming itself to be non-political, many of its members and supporters were politically conservative. Established at a time when the effects of the Depression were just starting to be felt in Western Australia, the League claimed at one stage to have as many as 10,000 members recruited through a constant barrage of campaigning by committed activists. In addition to the ephemera collection which includes pamphlets, leaflets, press clippings, stamps, stickers and membership cards the State Library collections also includes a secession map, speeches and the lyrics of several secession-themed songs.

Dr. T.H. Lovegrove Lock Hospital Collection

5021B

Between 1908 and 1919 Bernier and Dorre Islands off the coast of Carnarvon were the sites of lock hospitals where Aboriginal people were forcibly placed due to non-specific diagnosis of venereal disease. Several hundred Aboriginal people from across Western Australia were forcibly removed from their family and country to the lock hospitals. Many family members who were separated during the lock hospital scheme never saw each other again. It is conservatively estimated that more than 200 people died on the islands. Non-Indigenous people with venereal diseases were not subject to such measures. Dr Thomas Henry Lovegrove was the Principal Medical Officer for Western Australia, whose nephew Dr Fred Lovegrove was the Superintendent Medical Officer at the lock hospitals on Bernier and Dorre Islands. This collection contains photographs of the Carnarvon region, including its Aboriginal inhabitants, Bernier and Dorre Island hospitals and Aboriginal patients, AND stereoscopes of an Aboriginal dance.

Fanny Balbuk in the Daisy Bates Papers

MN 1406

Fanny Balbuk (1840-1917) was a prominent Whadjuk Noongar woman and Aboriginal activist throughout the early years of the Swan River Colony. Also known as Yooreel, she was born on Heirisson Island (Matagarup) and regularly walked her ancestral trail from her birthplace through what is now the Perth CBD to Lake Kingsford on the Western limits of the Perth townsite. Balbuk never allowed colonial development to stand in her way and would regularly break through or climb over fences and force her way through buildings in order to continue walking her track and gather bush foods including gilgies and vegetables. As reported by Daisy Bates, Balbuk would “stand at the gates of Government House, cursing everyone within, because the stone gates guarded by a sentry enclosed her grandmother’s burial ground.” Much of what is known and recorded about Fanny Balbuk is due to the writing of Daisy Bates, and as such understanding has been filtered through the lens of a white woman. However, more recent research recasts Balbuk away from this colonial framing.

John Hutchinson Recordings of Birdsong

AC8661A

John Hutchinson (1928-2015) was a field recordist and amateur ornithologist. This collection comprises 303 audio recordings of birdsong recorded Hutchinson between 1962 and 1988 in locations across Western Australia, including the Kimberley, Pilbara and South West regions. John Hutchinson began making recordings of wildlife in 1956 with his own invented audio recording device entitled the 'radiogram'. In 1959 he joined the Department of Agriculture working on noxious weed control, which saw him travel to remote areas of the state. He collected songs, corroborees and languages of Indigenous Australians but shifted the focus of his recordings to wildlife, specifically birdsong in 1960. He retired at the age of 44 in 1972 to focus on his passion for recording birdsong full-time. John would spend up to six months of the year travelling to record birdsong, often spending between three to five weeks in a specific location to become acquainted with the birds in the area. John spent the last portion of his life at his property in Dunsborough, which became a haven for native flora and fauna, including birdlife.

In addition to publishing numerous novels, short stories and various writing in other genres she also worked to organise unemployed workers and helped to found and was closely associated with a number of left-wing women's activist groups. Her public position as a communist and a female writer saw the Australian Security Intelligence Organisation (ASIO) keep Prichard, the Communist Party and many of its associated women's activism organisations under surveillance during the 1950s and '60s. Prichard's private archives include articles, letters, sketches, speeches and other writing, including correspondence with the Union of Soviet Writers and the Foreign Commission of Soviet Writers. Prichard's correspondence spans the late 1930s through the Spanish Civil War, about which she was particularly outspoken, through the second world war and beyond and encompasses both politics and literature.

Russian Spies in Albany

State Records Office Item 1885/1088

In March 1885, the Colonial Secretary of WA received a coded, top-secret telegram warning of impending war with Russia. The thought of war was triggered by Russia's incursions into eastern Afghanistan, bordering with what was then India under control of the British Raj. Albany was seen as a point of possible conflict and the Albany Resident Magistrate was instructed to report immediately any Russian Ships of War in or near its waters. As was reported by the Inspecting Field Officer at Perth to the Colonial Secretary, Albany was considered "the point most liable to attack and of the greatest strategical value to the Empire generally". Albany was also perceived as a location that was completely undefended. The State Records Office holds a number of government files relating to what was perceived as a looming war between Russia and British Empire in early 1885, including coded telegrams from the Chief Secretary's Department, and documents compiled by the Colonial Secretary's Office.

WA Government Film Collection

Various

Across almost half a century the WA Government Film Unit was responsible for delivering educational and informational and instructional films for various state government departments. These included films with a range of purposes and topics such as providing information about specific construction or mining initiatives, overviews of various retail or consumer industries, broader tourism information about Western Australian locations, and educational or health initiatives focussed around specific lifestyle choices. Across more than 300 films a range of themes emerge in terms of the way the state is depicted culturally and the values and priorities that are projected as being central to Western Australian society. Particular visual and scripting motifs are utilised consistently to render specific filmmaking and storytelling structures, but they also speak to the ways in which Western Australia was projected by its government both to its own population and also to the world.
